

The Fourteen Parallels.

The able editors of the New York Daily Times and the New York Herald are hotly engaged in a controversy involving their respective characters and sagacity. According to the News Bureau made overtures to the rebels, offering to put the Herald under their control, or what amounts to the same thing, that for the sum of $50,000 securely invested in England, he would do all that lay in his power to promote the success of the rebellion. It makes very little difference whether this story was first broached in the Herald or the News or in any other journal. The accusation is cast into Bonner's teeth every day. On the other hand the Herald accuses Wood with having received $30,000 or more through the notorious Thompson for services rendered of to be rendered to the South. And so they go, bickering, quarreling, bantering and abusing each other, while the moral sense of their readers is outraged with low-lived slugs. We sometimes wonder why it is that a gentleman or a scholar will continue on the subscription lists of such journals, while other and far more respectable newspapers may be had. The only excuse ever urged which amounts to anything like a justification is that—a craving desire for the earliest news. But surely morality, good order, decency and character, should not at all give way to a morbid desire for news, good and bad. If there were forty editions of newspapers in a day, some men would like to read them all, and precious little good it would do them in the end. The News is now engaged in ransacking the past, and parallelism is its great hobby. What the Herald said on such and such a day is diligently sought out, in order to contrast it with the utterances of other periods. In this way, the News has established to its own intense satisfaction fourteen parallels, in each of which some egregious falsification, perversion or contradiction crops out. The News is by no means a pioneer in this sort of tactics. To show at the infirmities of one's neighbor while concealing home feelings is an old trick, and one that has been frequently resorted to by the partizan press. Doubtless, the Herald if it should hear itself, might be able to trap the News in parallels. Unless a newspaper is guided by principle it will of necessity contradict itself. It speaks to its readers every secular day, and I no wonder that it should be inconsistent if it lacks the great lever of truthfulness. A man forgets from day to day what he talks, about especially if he be of a gossiping and quarrelous nature. In the same manner a newspaper of the little-tattling sort will get into difficulties and be constrained to swallow its own words. We have no apology to offer for the Herald; it can do its own dirty work. Taking the declarations set forth in the fourteen parallels established by the News, to be the bona fide reproductions of the Herald's language (and we have no reason to doubt the correctness of the quotations) what a monstrous exhibition do we have of the utter recklessness of the latter journal. The foulest epithets applied to the late President, the grossest caricatures of his person, the most shocking attacks upon his character, in contrast with commendations of his policy, his geniality, and his diplomacy, constitute the staple of the parallels. It seems also that the Herald was bold enough to don the mantle of the prophet but in vain. It undertook to foretell what did not come to pass, and it forbade that to occur which certainly did happen. If this exposure of the Herald's follies and short-sightedness was made on an account of a real desire to promote public virtue, the News is entitled to just praise, but whether it will do that notorious journal any good, remains to be seen.

Southern Advice to the South.

This is the era of advice, good, bad and indifferent. To say nothing of the quantities brought over by every steamer, prepared expressly for our benefit by the London Times and other great English fabricators, the domestic supply of the article is very abundant. Among the recipients thus far, the negroes of the South, it will be conceded by their most liberal enemies, have been pre-eminent favored. Everybody who has anything to do with them, from President Johnson down to Gov. Holden, through a long line of military officials, has impressed upon them the virtues of industry, sobriety and economy, with the particular caution that freedom does not mean laziness. If it be freedom, man can appropriate one quarter of the real good advice given them, their progress will be a marvel to the world, and perhaps a cause of envy to some of their advisers. It is nothing more than fair, therefore, that a part of the tide of good counsels should be diverted to our white Southern brethren, who may need it quite as much. And it must be conceded that the Northern press has not been behindhand in this neighborly work. But we now learn from the special New York correspondence of one of the leading Richmond papers that the natives of the South now resident in the North, who think they enjoy peculiar advantages in virtue of their position, are the most earnest in their counsels and are likely to be heard with the most favor. If, to say the least, a matter of curiosity to Northern readers to know what this advice is. The correspondent referred to says there are two classes of Southerners in New York, of which the first consists of men who have carefully preserved their Southern individuality," and, of course, sympathize heartily with the rebellion. These men hold as follows:

"Southern society, delightful as it was, has yet in it, as an inevitable sequence of the negro element, a certain indolent negligence and inattention to the details of affairs (both as to social and industrial life), which can but be amended by the elimination of the negro and the introduction of a new ethnic element, in the shape of the better class of emigrants—such as the Poles, the French, the higher order of the Irish, and Northern farmers not surcharged with with fanatical notions about the negro, the Gospels, the rights of women, temperance, dietetics, etc. A not undue proportion of these elements—just enough to leave the slow Southern lump—they think, would produce, in the course of a few generations, a new people, a new people who will combine the frankness, the hospitality, the love of truth and the sense of honor of the Southerner, with the more practical, industrious, systematic, neat and economical qualities of the foreigners just enumerated."

The other class of Southern advisers are those who left the South after the outbreak of the rebellion, and came North "to look after their property and make money." "They say," says the writer, "that you never had any common sense, and never will have any until you throw all your vagaries about honor, family, State rights, constitutional limitation, &c., to the dogs, and set energetically to work to out-Herod Herod, out-work the Irishman, out-economize the German, and so on. In this way and in this way alone, they contend, can we ever catch up with the world and keep up with it in its present rate of progress—'at astra per astra'—it matters little, for 'the devil always takes the hindmost.' It is plain that the writer is so prejudiced against the latter class that he may not reject their opinions quite fairly. And yet, a careful comparison will detect some resemblance, in the two counsels. What is called 'vagaries' and want of 'common sense' in the last extract, seem to be very like that which is gracefully hinted at in the first—a 'sequence of the negro element, a certain indolent negligence and inattention to the details of affairs.' We conclude, then, that the upshot of the advice of Northern Southerners to Southern Southerners is, to welcome emigration, eschew shiftlessness and 'set energetically to work.' It is good advice.
